

The image shows the front cover of an antique book. The cover is bound in deep red leather. A complex, repeating geometric and floral pattern is embossed in gold into the leather. This pattern consists of interlocking shapes, including circles and squares with rounded corners, each containing intricate floral or arabesque designs. The overall effect is a dense, richly textured surface. In the center of the cover, there is a prominent, vertically oriented label with a scalloped, four-lobed border, also gold-tooled. The label contains the title 'Dahn Rolandin' in a black, gothic-style font. The spine of the book is visible on the left side, showing several raised bands. The book is set against a dark, neutral background.
