

the British government in 1841 and the American government in 1842. In 1843 the British government again refused to recognize the American claims, and in 1844 the American government refused to recognize the British claims.

The British government was not willing to recognize the American claims, and the American government was not willing to recognize the British claims. The British government was not willing to recognize the American claims, and the American government was not willing to recognize the British claims.

The British government was not
willing to recognize the American
claims, and the American government
was not willing to recognize the British claims.

The British government was not
willing to recognize the American
claims, and the American government
was not willing to recognize the British claims.

The British government was not
willing to recognize the American
claims, and the American government
was not willing to recognize the British claims.