Bags of gold and silver Jack took home, but still his mind did lean Towards another prize, and journey up the lucky stalk of bean.
Hidden in his usual corner in the giant's house, he spied, Bought for that great man's amusement, playing sweetly by his side While he slept, a golden harp, which Jack at once caught up, and ran,
But the harp with human voice cried,
"Master, master, stop this man!"
But so tipsy was the giant, though he tried to run and bawl, That, with all his pains, he could not stop the flight of Jack at all.

UB Braunschweig http://www.digibib.tu-bs.de/?docid=00000266