76. The Fox and the Frog.

A Frog just creeping out of his mud, boasted of his ability and practise in all branches of sciences, particularly in medicine, in presence of a Fox. „Thou poor little fellow,“ cried the Fox — „thou shouldst first convince thyself of the infirmities of thy own body and try to remedy them, before you will teach others.“

Application.

There is always a great difference between talking and acting; and some who carry the greatest schemes in their heads, are often not able to execute the smallest part of them.
