94. The Fox and the Wolf.

The Wolf on one of his rambles, happened to fall into a pool and could not with all his efforts get out of it. To his greatest pleasure he detected a Fox at some distance and very powerfully began to call for his help. He came and asked with mischievous joy, „tell me how you got into this uncomfortable situation? You must in this cold weather, freeze terribly? How long have you been in it?“ „Spare your mocking Sir,“ cried the Wolf impatiently, „here it is not in the right place, and first help me out of the mud, I shall then answer all your questions.“

Application.

It is cruel to make a sport of people's misfortunes, without showing any inclination to redreſs it. The unhappy always deserve our pity and only low and vulgar minds can make him the object of their scorn.
